Art Files Explained

RASTER VS. VECTOR

When you place an order, you will be asked to send art files containing the design you want printed. If you have them, vector files are preferred to raster files—here's an explanation of the difference between the two.

RASTER TYPES: .PSD/.PNG/.JPG/.TIFF

Raster files are images made up of pixels, which are tiny squares of color. This is standard for photographs. The more pixels, the better the print quality. At minimum, your image should be 300 DPI at print scale.

VECTOR TYPES: .AI/.EPS/.SVG/.PDF

Vector files don't use pixels—instead they are made of paths and shapes that are mathematically-based. That means it can be resized without losing any quality. Logos and text are usually vector.

Vector

We can also recreate graphics for $100 per hour of design time.

Our stickers are digitally printed on vinyl, outdoor-rated for three years. Every sticker comes with an easy peel liner.

DIRECT TO GARMENT

Direct-to-garment, or DTG printing, is a way of printing that works much like your ink jet printer at home. This process is great for printing photographs or designs with lots of colors. There are no minimums, so it's perfect for small quantity orders. This print method works best on 100% cotton apparel. The typical turnaround time is 5 to 7 business days.

SCREEN PRINT

How It Works

1. The design is separated by color, and each color is printed on its own transparent film
2. Light-sensitive emulsion is coated onto a blank screen
3. The screen is exposed to UV rays and sprayed with water, leaving behind the image of the design
4. Ink is pushed through the exposed screen, either by hand or machine
5. The tee is run through a dryer, curing the ink

Screen printing has a minimum quantity of 24 pieces, and is great for large orders with a limited-color design. Turn-around time is typically 7 to 10 business days. For darker apparel colors, an additional white base is added underneath the design to get those colors to pop. Our standard ink is plastisol which gives a vibrant and precise print. We also offer discharge ink, which creates a softer feel, as well as water-based and specialty inks (additional fees apply for non-standard inks).
